Essentially, that's all there is to the Fuji G617. For such a specialized device, it's an incredibly simple camera. Hell, the user's manual is only thirteen pages in length. But this simplicity can be deceiving. Shooting the Fujifilm G617 is a process that rewards concentration, and tends to punish less conscientious photographers.

Note that this lens has Fuji's EBC (Electron Beam Coating) moniker, which denotes Fuji's multi-coating technology. One very interesting note: The G617 manual states that the lens is 6 elements in 4 groups, while the Fujinon GX617 version of the 105mm SW is listed as 6 elements in 6 groups, as is the Large Format version of this lens.

The first medium format panoramic camera by Fuji was the Fujica Panorama G617. It was released in 1983 with a fixed Fujinon EBC SW 105mm f/8 lens and fixed optical viewfinder. The camera took both 120 and 220 roll film - four or eight frames respectively. These features were retained in the renamed Fuji Panorama G617, which was released in 1985.

Camera review: the Fuji Panorama GX617, a legendary ...

First introduced in 1983, the G617 is a wide-field camera that captures photographs with 3:1 aspect ratios measuring 2.25 x 6.5" (6 x 17 cm). The G617 was designed for shooting landscapes, architecture, and—from personal experience—speedboat catalogs (more on this later). The G617 is fully mechanical and fully manual—no batteries required.

The G617 is the cheapest camera one can purchase to get into 617 shooting, with the exception of lensless cameras like the Gaoersi, which cost more after purchasing a lens. The G617 has a fixed lens, 105mm F8, it is fixed in a focus helical that has a remarkably short focus throw. It is also scale focus.
